Trip Style: Trekking + Climbing

Trip Difficulty: Challenging

Pisang Peak (6,019m) is one of the most chosen trekking peaks falling in Annapurna region of Nepal. This 'pyramidal' peak over Pisang, a settlement on the Annapurna Circuit is located inside the Manang District, northern part of Nepal. Pisang peak is counted among one of the technical peak for climbing among of the peaks in Nepal. The western border of the peak is secured by a lynching glacier and bestows extensive challenge. Also, since the western tip of the edge has vast rock slabs, the climb becomes challenging. The peak rises over yak meadows in a consistent incline of snow to the final peak point.

To begin our Pisang Peak Climbing, we depart from Katmandu to Besisahar and start trekking on the path common with Annapurna Circuit paths. On the way, we will pass by areas like -Chamje (1410m), Bagarchhap (2080m), Chame (2720m) in order to get to the base camp from Pisang village. Our trail ascends all the way through sparse forest and pasture to reach the Pisang Base camp lying at an elevation of Additionally, we will walk further to High Camp at 5,400m. And the distinct ridge takes us to the concluding snow incline which is fairly vertical and little tricky to get to the summit of Pisang peak. The peak point offers really superb vistas of the Annapurna range including Tilicho Peak, Gangapurna, Annapurna II and IV, as well as the Glacier Dome.

Indeed, Pisang Peak bestows a perfect sightseeing chance. After doing well to climb to the summit, we keep walking to Manang valley and go on further up to reach Thorong Padi lying at an altitude of 4450m. We will traverse a highest pass on the earth, Thorong pass and move to Muktinath, a famous pilgrimage spot for Hindus. We will also pass by Kagbeni, an entry way to Upper Mustang region and then reach Jomsom, a capital city of Mustang and then move to Pokhara.

This 20-days Pisang Peak Climbing/Expedition takes you to the maximum altitude of 6, 019m. Tentatively, you will walk 6 to 7 hours per day. For accommodation, you may either stay in lodge or set a camp. All in all, Pisang Peak Expedition designed by Mountain Sherpa Trekking will take you passing marvelous backdrop and allow you to get the sight of distinctive culture.
